About the Atlantic Environmental Network ...

Background:

The Atlantic Environmental Network was first established in 1980 to build communication links among non-profit, non-government groups, organizations, and individuals that share concerns for the quality of the environment in the Atlantic region. While member groups differ greatly in their own mandates, their common concern for the ecologically sustainable use of natural resources, the importance of human health and the quality of the environment for its own intrinsic values provide the links upon which the Atlantic Environmental Network is based. Today, the AEN is comprised of over 400 such groups, organizations and individuals throughout the four Atlantic provinces. People working together through the AEN are forming a growing environmental movement pushing for individual, corporate and political environmental responsibility in Atlantic Canada.

Structure:

A volunteer steering committee consisting of representatives from each of the four Atlantic provinces is elected annually by member organizations at an annual general meeting. The steering committee provides the direction for AEN activities and projects which are carried out by a Regional Coordinator. The Coordinator works out of Fredericton, New Brunswick.

Mandate:

The Atlantic Environmental Network:

Facilitates communication and interaction among non-profit organizations and individuals sharing a concern for the quality of the environment.*

Facilitates joint initiatives among AEN participants around issues of mutual concern.*

Coordinates communication among participants, the Canadian Environmental Network, and other National level alliances.*

The Atlantic Environmental Network does not represent or speak on behalf of its paricipants.

Introduction...

November 2, 1987 marked the new beginning of the Atlantic Environmental Network. For the first time, the AEN had the resources to have on staff a full-time Regional Coordinator. Much of the first year of operation has been devoted to building the network itself - establishing contacts and broadening participation to include not just environmental citizen's groups, but fishermen's associations, woodlot owners, farmers' unions, peace groups, women's groups, Native groups and social action committees as well.

This Directory was compiled from questionnaires that were sent out to a list of contacts that were on an original mailing list of groups known to have taken stands on environmental issues in the past. Follow-up mailouts and phone calls were made throughout the spring and summer. As well, some contacts were discovered by "word of mouth". No doubt - some of the information in this Directory is already out of date and by no means are the listings in this Directory complete. Any organizations that have been overlooked are encouraged to contact:

Atlantic Environmental Network:
180 St. John Street,
Fredericton, N.B., E3B 4A9
(506)453-0680.

The Directory lists 161 non-profit groups in the Atlantic region, along with contacts for the environmental networks across the country and New England, USA; and appropriate provincial and federal government offices in Atlantic Canada.

We hope that this directory opens the door for you to the many organizations that provide information and expertise on our many pressing environmental problems in Atlantic Canada.

Alphabetical listing of groups indexed by province

New Brunswick
Newfoundland & Labrador
Nova Scotia
Prince Edward Island

How to use this section:

Groups are listed alphabetically, indexed by province. The reference numbers appearing to the left of the group names are to refer the user from the "Groups Listed By Subject Area" and the "Resources Listed By Subject Area" sections.

Group addresses and contact names are given. Where applicable, appropriate titles are given to the group contacts.

Group memberships are given where applicable.

Also listed are resources offered by groups, but as each organization has their own policies for making their resources available, the user is encouraged to contact the groups prior to ordering or using any of the resources

New Brunswick

There hasn't been a period in our history where environmental deterioration has had such a direct impact on the livelihoods of New Brunswickers. Clam diggers can't work because the clam flats have been contaminated by untreated sewage dumped by our coastal communities. Farmers are fighting to maintain their livelihoods on soil that has been degraded and eroded by farm practices encouraged by governments and the food industry. A growing number of people are unable to use their household water because the groundwater is contaminated. The list goes on and on.

New Brunswick has had a long tradition of environmental activisim. We've often been in the forefront of national environmental issues. The Maritime Energy Coalition was one of the flagships of both the Canadian anti-nuclear and alternate energy movements throughout the 1970's. The Concerned Parents group was the first broadly-based organization in Canada to question the way pesticides were regulated, and to mount a campaign against the widespread aerial application of these toxic chemicals.

The early eighties saw a lull in environmental activisim in the province. But in 1988 we have entered a new era of action. Contained in the following pages you will find the organizations in the forefront of this struggle - groups that are challenging activities and policies that threaten our environment, and groups that are promoting environmentally sustainable development alternatives.

From the productive fisheries in the Bay of Fundy to the rich farmland of the Saint John River Valley, and the forests that press against the banks of the Restigouche, our communities depend on a healthy environment. To protect the environment is to sustain our communities. We are a people whose roots run deep. We will not let our communities be decimated by the rising tide of environmental destruction. We will defend the land from those that seek to exploit it. And we will work to develop our resources in a way that will strengthen our communities, reversing our slide towards ecological collapse.

Newfoundland and Labrador abounds in an unspoiled environment, from its rugged seashores to pristine rivers and lakes and untouched wilderness. This natural heritage has shaped the character of Newfoundlanders, a character in which traditional activities such as fishing and hunting is still the mainstay for many. The relatively small population of Newfoundland and Labrador combined with its isolation and little industrial development makes it possible for the natural splendors seen by our forfathers to be experienced today.

In the last three decades, some of these natural splendors are rapidly giving way to many developments such as road building and forestry and mining practices. In the 1980's and in the future, Newfoundland faces developments like off-shore oil drilling, Hydro- electric developments, low-level military flying and more intensive forestry and fishing practices. How these developments will effect the natural environment is controversial. As more people get involved expressing their concerns and views it is hoped that a balance between development and the environment will lead to a sustainable future for Newfoundland and Labrador.

The Nova Scotia Environmental movement operates through personal contacts, over kitchen tables, and by small local committees. Born in the late 1960's, about the same time environmentalism took flight across North America, the Nova Scotia movement has addressed many issues, including alternative energy sources and conservation, the use of chemical pesticides and herbicides in forestry and agriculture, water quality, waste disposal and recycling, and air pollution.

Questions arising/resulting from forestry practices in Nova Scotia have often taken centre stage in the province's environmental history. The late 70's saw the famous "Budworm Battles", where a group of Cape Breton homeowners tried to stop pesticide use in their region. The movement also helped force the provincial government to adopt a "non-nuclear" energy path.

Organizations like Ecology Action Centre, Tusket River Environmental Protection Society, Nova Scotia Coalition for Alternatives to Pesticides, Kings Environmental Group, Citizens for Environmental Information and others have worked to make environmental issues a common concern. Over the last twenty years the environmental movement in Nova Scotia has become more broad-based, fighting to voice citizens' concerns and to build a role for them in decision making that effects the province's environment.

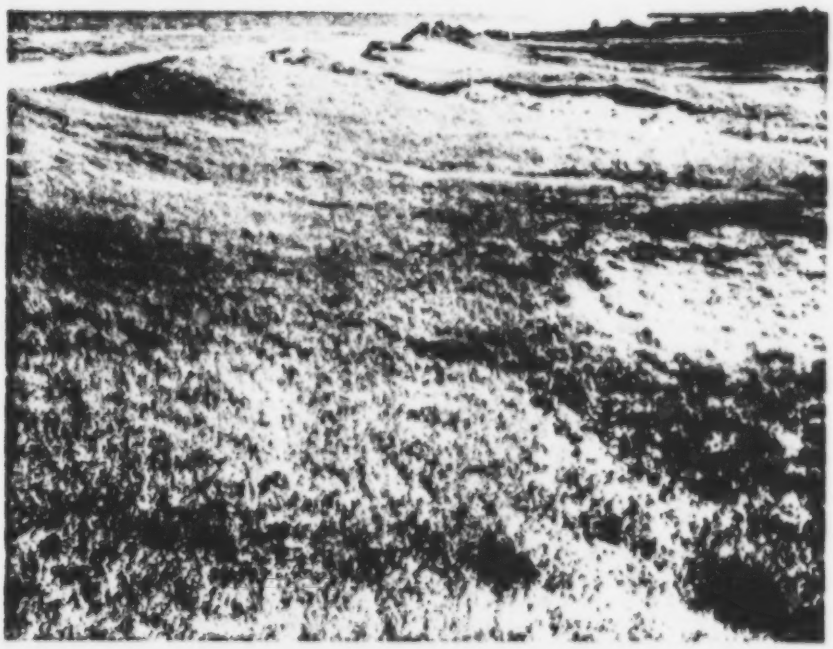
PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND



With fewer residents than many cities, yet the highest provincial population density, P.E.I. is a study in contrasts. Many Islanders make their living by daily interaction with the natural world; although beneficial, this also leads to "taking things for granted". Shipbuilding and agriculture virtually denuded the original forest cover, so P.E.I. is not rich in wilderness; however the Island's beauty gives proof that anthropocentric attitudes need not create a wasteland. Nevertheless, environmental damage is accelerating rapidly in our increasingly chemically dependent mechanised society.

Development is the key environmental issue for P.E.I.. Low per capita income encourages consideration of all options as we try to maintain a balance between quality of life and affluence-at-any-cost. The annual influx of hundreds of thousands of visitors loads both infrastructure and coffers, exemplifying the dilemma of how to prosper while remaining unspoiled. Lack of funds and a widely dispersed population impede organisation and communication. However, individual political involvement is very high and the populace is small. This facilitates informal contact. Pride in the Island's beauty, tranquility and community spirit act as a brake on rapacious development schemes giving hope for the future.

Listing of groups indexed by subject area

How to use this section:

This section lists organizations indexed by the subject areas representing their primary areas of interest/activity. The selection of subject areas are listed below. Because there is much overlap among subject areas, and many groups are general in their activities, it is difficult to identify precisely which groups fit under which subject areas. For simplicity sake, groups were asked to choose subject areas that "best" fit their activities.

For more complete information about the individual groups listed in this section, the user is encouraged to refer back to the alphabetical listing of organizations indexed by province. Each group is assigned a reference number to facilitate referral back to the alphabetical listings.

For example:

Subject Area

ABORIGINAL

Group Reference Number

CUSO -NB13
Ecology Action Centre - NS16

CUSO is group number - NB 13 with detailed information about the group available in the alphabetical listings in New Brunswick (NB) beside number 13.

Ecology Action Centre is group number - NS 103 with detailed information about the group available in the alphabetical listings in Nova Scotia (NS) beside number 103.

The codes for Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island are NF and PEI respectively.

Resources indexed by subject area

How to use this section:

This section lists resources produced by non-profit organizations in Atlantic Canada. Some useful resources produced by organizations outside of the Atlantic region are also included in this section under the sub- heading "National". The resources are indexed by subject area.

Where possible the resource listings have the following format: Title; author/producer; year of production or publication; number of pages; price (if applicable) and reference number of the organization. As each organization has their own system and policies for postage and handling charges for distributing resource materials, or honorarium rates for speakers, the user is encouraged to contact the individual organizations to make arrangements for acquiring or using the resources listed in this section.

For more complete information about the individual groups listed in this section, the user is encouraged to refer back to the alphabetical listing of organizations indexed by province. Each group is assigned a reference number to facilitate referral back to the alphabetical listings.

For example:

Environmental Networks

About the Environmental Networks...

While similar in structure and mandate, the environmental networks listed below function independently. They all operate on a non-profit basis with an elected steering committee or board of directors. All have different information disseminating policies and membership structures. Regional Canadian networks are represented by elected representatives on the National Steering Committee of the Canadian Environmental Network.

The EnvironmentalNetworks are set up to facilitate information exchange and communication among the many non-profit organizations working for environmental responsibility. Each have their own databases, and access to environmental information nationally as in the case of the Canadian Environmental Network, and regionally in the case of the regional networks.

For more detailed information about network services contact the individual network offices.
